

Dr. Kurji is a general pediatrician & assistant professor of pediatrics at the University of Saskatchewan. She completed medical school at the University of Calgary in 2004 and pediatrics residency at the University of Saskatchewan in 2008. She practices both inpatient and outpatient pediatrics in Saskatoon and has a special interest in eating disorders. She is the physician lead of Youth Nourishing Connections, a multi-disciplinary clinic in Saskatoon for children and adolescents with eating disorders, and also provides consultant management for inpatients admitted with medical complications of eating disorders.

Outside of medicine, she enjoys spending time with her family, reading, baking, and going on adventures.