

Amy currently works as a Program Consultant with the Continuing Professional Development for Pharmacy Professionals. Up until recently, she divided her time by also working as a Clinical Pharmacist with the USask Chronic Pain Clinic (formerly MAC iOPS), where she was involved with getting the program up and running. Amy obtained her Bachelor of Science in Pharmacy (BSP) then followed this with completion of a hospital pharmacy residency and a Master of Business Administration. Prior to her most recent experience in primary care, Amy practiced in hospital-based settings, developing an interest and experience in the areas of supporting people living with substance use disorders, as well as acute and chronic pain. With a passion for ensuring patient safety along with quality pharmacy care, Amy also sits as the President for the province's licensing and regulatory body for pharmacy professionals.
